2	Learning outcomes : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Students have the ability to deepen and expand their knowledge in the field of public administration at the local (sub-national) level through inter, multi or transdisciplinary research. 2. Students have the ability to design models of decentralization and local government, as well as innovations in public sector governance at the regional level.
3	Description This course explains public administration at the sub-national level, especially at the regional level. The main topics in this course are divided into two, namely decentralization in a broad sense and local government. The discussion on decentralization begins with the division of power both vertically and horizontally, then continues with the views of several main theories about decentralization, as well as the scope of decentralization within the governance framework. The discussion of decentralization also includes a discussion of deconcentration and recent developments on asymmetric decentralization. The next discussion relates to local government which includes discussion of local government models and institutions, regional staffing, regional planning, regional finance, community participation in regional government,
